Bakers Against Racism: Middlebury College Student Bake Sale

We, a collection of Middlebury College students and recent graduates, actively stand against racism in all of its forms. Bakers Against Racism is a nationwide initiative that demands an end to white supremacy and the unjust treatment of Black people in the United States. We stand with this mission, and demand to see radical systemic and structural change in Vermont, in this country, and beyond. All parts of society must actively engage in anti-racist work, including our homes and community spaces. Complacency and silence should never have been an option. Action can take many forms, including donating to organizations that amplify Black voices and fight for racial equity, engaging in protests, and self-educating. Below is a link that contains some resources that work to unpack white privilege, white supremacy, and center the Black experience. Everyone can, and must, make meaningful change in their own lives and communities.

Compilation of resources: https://docs.google.com/document/d/1j7sDYKnlKmHK94FkgIbb-ajCavHWH4cOzUisPeICdFw/edit?usp=sharing

All proceeds raised will go directly to the American Civil Liberties Union of Vermont (ACLU Vermont) and Marsha P. Johnson Institute (MPJI). The ACLU is an organization that focuses on many civil liberties, including criminal justice reform, racial justice, LGBTQ+ rights, disability rights, voting rights, prisoners' rights, and immigrants' rights. The MPJI is an organization that protects and defends the rights of Black transgender people by "organizing, advocating, creating an intentional community to heal, developing transformative leadership, and promoting our collective power".

THANK YOU!

With care,
Katie Cox '20.5, Georgia Houde '20, Claire Contreras '22.5, Leila Faulstich '20, and Maya Gomez '20